PhD in Human Development & Family Studies (HDFS)
Degree checklist and recommended timeline for students who enter our program with a master’s degree

If the student has a master’s thesis it should be approved by the Director of Graduate Studies at the beginning of the student’s first semester. If the thesis is not approved, or if the student has a non-thesis master’s degree, then they are expected to complete a “thesis equivalency” by the end of their second year in the program.

The PhD Degree

The PhD consists of required courses (advanced statistics and qualitative methods E or G) plus 4 substantive courses, 2 HDFS 500 credits, and enough elective courses to reach the required 42 total coursework hours. In addition, the PhD requires 22 PhD thesis hours for a total of 64 hours.

Thesis hours help the student maintain full time status during the academic year as well summer. Although there is no limit to how many thesis hours a student can take, only 22 will be counted towards the PhD.

Substantive courses are 500 level HDFS courses that focus on a specialized empirical area (see list).

HDFS 450 and 550 are internship courses and thus do not meet the substantive requirement. They are recommended, and may be counted as electives.

No more than 8 hours of HDFS 598 may be used as elective credit.

Students who enter our PhD program with a master’s degree typically do not need to take any elective courses. Students are allowed to take electives, but they may not be necessary.
